AMONG THE MOORS.

A Visit to the Taugier-The Town and People. Correspondence London Standard. Correspondence London Standard.

The Epoca, of Madrid, had given out that Sir John Drummond Hay, our representative in Morocco, had left his usual residence at Tangier on a visit to the Sultan at the capital, with the express object of filling his mind with evil thoughts of Spain. The best way to contradict a lie is to track out the truth and tell it. There was no boat to Maland tell it. There was no boat to Malaga for a few days; Tangier was but thirty two miles off over the Straits; the thirty two miles off over the Straits; the Spahi was getting up steam in the bay, I determined to take a run across. Never Henry VIII; and although it had lain had I greater reason to congratulate my-self on a trip. Sir John Hay had left for Morocco, but his visit had no rela-tion to Spain whatever. We were a party of five—a gallant captain, of no matter what regiment and his wife, a party of five—a gallant captain, of no matter what regiment, and his wife, a portly, good-natured couple; a bright-eyed, bright-brained widow; a waggish Irishman and myself. While steaming through the broad belt of water, with its poetic coast lines, that pours between the Continents, we encountered a bottlethe Continents, we encountered a bottlenosed whale puffing and spewing along.
Hardly had we recovered from the newnose of this sensation when we passed Cape Malabatta and cut our way into the Bay of Tangier. The "Sultana of Moorish Cities," Tangier is sometimes called, and truly the does wear a regal, Sultana like air as seen from the distance, cushioned in state on the hillside, her the Convent de St. Domingo, in that city. He was then thirty-eight years old. The Convent de St. Domingo was lately demolished in search of treasure supcushioned in state on the hillside, her white flat roofs rising one above another or a stately ike marble ste thetall towers of the mosques piercing the air, and the multitudinous, many colored exactly as when placed there two hundred and seventy years before. His daughter, two and a half years of age, was lying under her father's feet, and as perfectly preserved as himself. The evidences of torture upon the body of the jeweler are fearfully apparent. In one respect, however, the expansion of the property of the preserved as the expansion of the property flags of all nations fluttering above the consulates. But in this, as in many other cases, it is distance lends enchantment to the view. A flotilla of tubs puts out to meet us; we descend into one manned by a brawny negro and a Moor, and put off for shore—that is, for as near the shore as our lading will allow. The instant the boat grounds, while we are ever, the appearance does not coincide with the record which we have given. The miscrable man must have died in the instant the boat grounds, while we are yet some fifteen yards from the beach, a lot of wild fellows, in skull cap and chirt tied at the waist and short cotton drawers, plunge into the water and advance to meet us. On they come till they are waist deep, and before I well know what he is about the foremost seizes me by the legs, swings me athwart his shoulder, and wades to the land. This is the unand wades to the land wades to the the legs, swings me athwart his shoulder, and wades to the land. This is the un-diguished mode in which aFrank makes his appearance among the Moslems of position in any part. Barbary. I was the first to land, and of course the first thought in my head was to turn round to laugh at my companions. The waggish Irishman took the affair philosophically, as if he were in the philosophically, as if he were in the habit of riding men. My friend the cap-tists reproduced the real beings whom The waggish Irishman took the affair philosophically, as if he were in the habit of riding men. My friend the captain, who turns the scale at seventaen stone two, was astride a lean Jew, who bent under his weight. I should dearly like to have a photograph of that gallant officer pick a back to add to my album.

At one moment I had hopes that he gestures are what we are apt to term
